SOME OBSERVATIONS

Concerning Nothing Very Serious But Worthy of Thought.

Roosevelt recently cut loose on the Administration because of the lack of preparedness for war and now Bryan opens up on Roosevelt because of the latter's speech. If these two wind jammers could be marooned on a desert island what a good time they could have trying to talk each other to death. Hurricanes, typhoons and all other brands of big winds would have small chance against them.

Everybody in Wood county knows Mr. M. P. Brewer of Bowling Green, one time Postmaster and many-time editor, but no one who knows him well will suspect him of being a joker. But he is—or was—and one of his jokes of many years ago was recently brought to the mind of the Journal man by a peculiar circumstance. The joke was when Brewer was working for editor Timmons in the Journal office. In these days the printer used a pencil in writing the names and addresses of subscribers on the papers, and it happened that down in Lake township there lived a man by the name of Adam Crossman, but when Brewer wrote the name he did it in this manner—A Dam Cross Man. That was enough. It was fun for Brewer but it wasn't so funny for Timmons when next he met Crossman.

To live lazier, to dress better, to earn less and to spend more, to travel faster and to get nowhere—these too often seem prevailing ambitions of a careless, care-free generation.

Rubber heels have been recommended for the early morning milkman. Might also put rubber tires on the milk wagons, felt shoes on the horses and shock absorbers between the milk cans.

"Are widows good stepmothers?" asks Laura Jean Libbey. Now there's a question for a joint debate that would be worth while, provided the platform and hall were adequately policed.

Whacking a bass drum at the psychological moment is being tried to make an athlete jump higher. Firing a cannon unexpectedly in his rear should get even better results.

Has the medical man who believes that kissing should be done through screens thought that lots of people might get forgetful and leave their screens at home?

The war experts of the metropolitan dailies are reeling off columns that have no value as forecasting the operations in the field, but otherwise the stuff is all right.

A literary critic says the world would be lovelier without the poets. A selfish thought. No one but a literary critic is compelled to read poetry.

"Explosion blows man ten feet into the air," says a Texas paper. That's not so bad as being blown ten feet into the earth.

Edison's "telescribe" records telephone conversation. It probably has nothing on the party line, at that.

The good old homemade strawberry shortcake blushes at the thought of the various base imitations.

The chronic kicker deserves a kicking.

THE CHOLERA SEASON

unrecalable, so rapid and sure did things follow upon the heels of one another. Children were stricken at play. Neighbors would sicken and die while attending others who were thus prostrate with the disease. People in health in the evening were often found dead in the morning. It is probable that some died of fright, who otherwise might have withstood their sickness. Homes were daily visited by patrols, in quest of any taken sick in the meantime and often persons were found dead not known to have been attacked. Few recovered. Most died. Physicians were upon duty day and night. The rattle of the dead wagon could be heard throughout the night, and the hammer of the coffin maker constantly reminded of the necessity of the evil boding days. Business was suspended. Grass grew in the streets. Homes were left desolate. Residents left in large numbers, the more resolute only remaining. Finally, after the scourge had seemed to burn itself out, and winter having come, men with their families gradually began to return. But for months, and even years, the footprints of the devastator were discernable, and even today, when one chances to interrogate an old settler, and a few of them yet remain, his questions about that dreadful month of August, in the year 1854, will often be met by a wave of the hand and an ominous shaking of the head.
